Learning Goals & Content

- Virginia Satir developed models to explore the universality of the human experience; among them was the “Self Mandala”. She saw the Mandala as a means for people to understand, integrate, and manage their lives. She divided the Self Mandala into eight dimensions, with the center being the self. Around the self, in a Mandala form, are the physical, emotional, intellectual, interactional, sensual, nutritional, contextual and spiritual dimensions.
- Satir experientially surfaced each dimension into the conscious awareness of individuals, resolving the conflicts between the dimensions, and then integrated them to help individuals become more wholesome and in charge of their lives.
- In this program, the Trainer will present applications of the “Self Mandala” in various contexts from teaching to therapy, with systemic perspective of human systems and their interaction.

Objectives

After the program, the participants will be able to...

- ✿ Describe the integration of the Mandala with other Satir models & tools such as the Iceberg, Communication Stances, Process of Change, Temperature Reading, Parts Parties & Family Genogram.
- ✿ Use the Self Mandala as strength based model and a tool for change & have a greater awareness of the Self Mandala as a tool for assessment.
- ✿ Describe clinical and teaching applications of the model.

Format

- The workshop will be didactic and experiential.
